

WORK AND REAL WORK

J Brooks Jensen

A Brooks Jensen Arts Publication

We all like to think we work hard — at whatever it is we do. I sit at my desk and type, read, think, edit, and click my mouse buttons. Then I look across the street from my office and see the shipbuilders turning piles of sheet metal into massive ships. When I compare what I do to what they do, I find it difficult to describe what I do as “work.” I don’t break a sweat and I don’t get dirty. Somehow, it seems like cheating to call it work.

In their protective clothing, hot, doing physically demanding tasks, contorted into uncomfortable positions, on their knees for weeks at a time, hanging in the air on the side of a ship — that is work. Even when I was young and fit, I doubt I would have had the stamina to be a shipbuilder. It is a privilege to watch them ply their craft and build, one piece at a time.

I'd salute them with a tip of my hat,
but my job doesn't require that I wear one.
